Functional design

Preface:

My website is for the hit d&d podcast "The Chain". The Chain is a weekly dungeons and dragons podcast from MCDM productions. They already have a website, but not one for the The chain and I think that this will clear up any mishaps that might happen.

Target audience:

My target audience is anyone who enjoys the podcast! This podcast doesn't really have a set target audience so neither will this website. Any fan is welcome here and should be able to navigate the website easily.

Website intent:

The goal of this website is to inform the audience of backstory and keep them up to date on the characters, current story and any changes in the stream and upload schedule.

Website structre:

For the website structure please take a look at the designs and the url list that I have uploaded to my Github.

Functionality per page:

Home:

Here there is the option for a modal window when you click on the "posts" on the front page. There is a sidebar on the left with some links to the social medias. Don't forget the nav in the top right of course from where you can navigate the website.

Story:

From the story page you can navigate to the history through a simple click of a link and you can go to the different characters via the different player cards.
